BY ALICE CARRY. Nay, leave me to my own sad heart— To memory's more than midnight shade; I seek to-day to stand apart From every thing that God has made.

I can not echo back your sigh; Nor can your smiling ever fall; The spaces deep and wide that lies Twixt friends and lovers—that is all. Forgive me, if your kind advance Of sympathy I thus dismiss; That word has no significance— No solace in an hour like this.

The past with its tumultuous sforms
Of sin and serrow, wildly driven,
Has closed about me till my arms
Can reach no way but up to Heaven.

And only Heaven the power can grant To steady my weak soul, so long Left twining like a water-plant Betwint the waves of right and wrong.

So leave me to myself, I pray, Nor seek to give me sigh for sigh, The smahine can not warm to-day, The clouds that lower along my sky.

A Leaf from the Past-Exciting Incident

The old settlers of Kentucky are familiar with the name of Captain Christopher Miller. He was one of those bold and dauntless spirits to whom we are indebted for the rescue of our State from the dominion of the bold and blood-thirsty savage. History has recorded many of his heroic deeds and melapholy rejections but one of the most ancholy privations; but one of the most thrilling and mysterious incidents in his eventful life has never met our eyes until we eventful life has never met our eyes until we found it in Finley's Autobiography; and as many of our readers may have never seen it, we will give a short account of it:

Christopher Miller and his brother Henry, were taken prisoners by the Indians when they were quite young, and remained with them unil they had learned many of the customs of these wild inhabitants of the forest. They were expert hunters, and had learned to love the savage freedom of their captors. They were adopted into an Indian family, and it seemed they were indeed much attached to their mode of life, hunting and fishing being thier chief and almost only emfishing being thier chief and almost only em-ployment. Finally, Henry began, when about twenty-four, to think of returning to the white settlements; and he mentioned his thought to Christopher, but he would not think of returning with him, so Henry set off alone, and after much suffering and priva-tion he reached Kentucky, where he lived for several years, when in 1794, the Indians becomseveral years, when it 1794, the indians occoming troublesome, an expedition was gotten up under General Wayne to chastise them.
Henry joined this expedition and set out with
it. On the march, General Wayne, in order to avoid the possibility of an ambuscade, ordered Captain Wells to select four rangers to dered Captain Wells to select four rangers to keep in advance and reconnoitre the country. The keen judgment of Captain Wells did not fail to detect in Henry Miller the very man for such an expedition, and he was ac-cordingly selected. During the march Henry found little to do, no Indians being found on the route. On reaching Greenville, General Wayne, having no intimation as to the future intentions of the subtle foe, determined to send out Cantain Wells and his daring comintentions of the subtle foe, determined to send out Captain Wells and his dsring comrades to capture an Indian, in order that through him the plans of the Indians might be discovered. They accordingly set out across the country, crossing St. Mary's and proceeding to the Auglaize, they turned up the river for several miles, when the keen eyes of the rangers discovered a smoke. Hitching their horses, the gallant hitle band left two of their party to guard them, while the other three, Henry Miller being one of them, crept along in the direction of the smoke, which they found to be on an elevated piece of open ground, surrounded by three Indians engaged in roasting venison over the fire.

They then stole along as lightly and noise-They then stole along as lightly and noise-lessly as panthers until they reached the point desired. Here their plans were quickly arranged. It was agreed that Miller and one of his comrades should shoot each his man, leaving the third, who was swifter than an Indian on foot, to give chase to and capture the remaining Indian. Miller was to shoot the one on the right, and his comrade the one on the left.

his speed. McClelland was rapidly coming up with the retreating Indian, when coming to a bend in the river, the latter saw he must soon be overtaken, and leaped off the bank into the river, a distance of twenty feet, where he sank up to his middle in the mud. McClelland made a leap on to him, and sunk down in like manner, when the Indian drew his knife and McClelland his tomahawk. A parley ensued, and the Indian threw down his knife.

In the meantime, Henry and his compan In the meantime, Henry and his companion came up, the two were rescued from the mud, and the prisoner bound securely. He appeared sullen, and refused to answer any questions asked him. He was then washed, to rid him of his coating of mud, when it was discovered that they had taken a white man instead of an Indian. The party returned to their horses, and began at once to retrace their steps toward the camp at Green-sille. On the journey the prisoner continued ville. On the journey the prisoner continued moody and silent, until Henry recollecting that he had a brother with the Indians, and that he had a brother with the Indians, and thinking this might possibly be him, he ap-proached and called him by his Indian name, when he answered with seeming surprise, when the two brothers immediately recog-nized each other; for the prisoner was none other than Christopher Miller. He had been in the middle when the fatal messenger of death had overtaken his associates, and by this triffing circumstance was assayd to an death had overtaken his associates, and by this trifling circumstance was saved to answer the wise ends of an All-wise Providence. He returned to Greenville with his captors, determined to remain; and afterward rendered the white settlers the most important aid in their future contests with the wily savage. Many of his decendants still live in our midst, and enjoy the fruits of his well spent and eventful life, and to enjoy the reputation of his name.

THE DUES BOY'S OATH.—In the Court of Probate and Insolvency, recently, a deaf and dumb boy came forward to prove his claim againt the insolvent. The debtor admitted the claim to be just, the other creditors were willing that it should be allowed; but how could the deaf and dumb boy repeat the oath? The Judge declined to take official knowledge of the boy's infirmities, as the lad himself had not said any thing of them, but held up his own hand, looked the boy directly in the eye, repeated the oath and nodded. The boy lifted up his right hand and gave a similar nod. The claim was admitted,—Worcester Spy.

A Dandy's Disaster. During a recent pleasant afternoon, or rather about the time which poets torm "gloaming," when the dusky folds of night are beginning to close, an exquisite fop, "perfumed like a milliner," might have been seen strutting along B—ker street, reminding the observer of a peacock suddenly stricken with the spring-halt, his head thrown back with a conceited air, and staring at the ladies as they passed, and some of whom he thought were "dem foin owetahs." Ahl you should have seen that irresistible moustache, goatee and imperial, a la Vandyke's Charles the First, and those pretty, luxuriant locks, "which made such wanton gambols with the wind," and took captive so many femining have seen that irresistible moustache, goatee and imperial, a la Vandyke's Charles the First, and those pretty, luxuriant locks, "which made such wanton gambols with the wind," and took captive so many feminine hearts. Ah! those enchanting ringlets! "Thereby hangs a tale."

The above is a faint outline of Horatio Claudius Fizzle, who, on the eventful and never-to-be-forgotten evening referred to, had taken more than usual pains to render himself captivating. He looked, in fact, a perfect Adonis—"a man of wax," looking with contempt on the "vulgah" people who "pass" of twixt the wind and his nobility."

Mr. Fizzle's object, on that particular evening, was to meet a "charming ewentah"—as he styled her to his boon companion, Tom Addlehead—and whose hearthe imagined he had taken captive, and whom he intended making another victim to his perfdy; but as Burns says, "the best laid plans o' mice and men gang aft aglee." And so it happened with poor Fizzle, as the sequel will show. In due time the fair object of his solicitude appeared; and then, with all the studied air of a Beau Brummel, assuming his most bewitching style of blandness, he bowed of a Beau Brummel, assuming his most bewitching style of blandness, he bowed gracefully, at the same time gently raising his chapeau, displaying his hyperion curls, which were irresistible.

In the meantime, while Fizzle and his fair inamorata were absorbed on Cupid's theme, a wicked-looking urchin might have been seen dodging in close proximity. His half-suppressed smile, coupled with an anxious eye toward Mr. Fizzle, indicated that he was bent on mischief. From his pocket he drew a thin, almost invisible cord, one end of which he fastened to a rail, and the other end (to which was attached a small fishing-look) he fixed, with the adroitness of a professor of sleight-of-hand, into the flowing ringlets of the blissful dandy, who was congratulating himself on the conquest he was making. The urchin hastily withdrew, as if he had fired a powder magazine, and watched anxionaly for the explosion.

At length the parting came; sweet, loving smiles exchanged; the fond adien, "au revoir," Fizzle receding backward with studied grace; which movement had scarcely commenced, In the meantime, while Fizzle and his fair

Fizzle receding backward with studied grace; which movement had scarcely commenced, when the passers-by were startled by the screaming exclamation of "Good heaven" from poor Fizzle, who stood transfixed like a statue. And ohl horror of horrors' what a sight met the gaze of the fair admirer of those glossy curls, which were now lying ignominiously on the pavement, while poor F.'s perieranium presented an inviting study to Professor Fowler.

There was a "peculiarly perplexing predicament." For a moment he gazed with a look of consternation, mingled with despair; then, seizing his wig and chapeau, he hastily hurried away sans ceremonie, leaving the fair admirer of luxuriant locks to reflect on the deception of appearances.

Amusing Account of an Experience with Artificial Dentals.

We have been very much amused in listen-ng to an acquaintance of ours, when describing his experience with a new set of teeth. He remarked:

"I have had all my teeth pulled out, for to tell the truth, I think they have been a curse to me always, rather than a blessing. Now, in their place I have had false ones put in, in their place I have had false ones put in, and I must tell you my experience with my new masticators. I felt when the "set" was first put in, as though I had a couple of wheel-barrows full of paving stones lying around loose in my mouth, and it seemed as if they were going to be spilled out at every moment. The first day I waited till every one had done their dinner, not daring to make an exhibition of my teeth and run the risk of their dropping on the table. Well, I chewed a little and stopped, chewed again and stopped, and finally went to my room and laid the darned things on the back part of an upper shelf, thinking they were no go. The next day I tried them again, but with little better success, and after this I would carry them in my pocket, occasionally trying the things on, and every time experiencing some new emotion. One day they would feel as much like a great horse-shoe, with nails in, as anything else; and again I could be certain that I had a great cheater when he had a such like a great horse-shoe, with nails in, as anything else; and again I could be certain that I had a great cheater when the one on the right, and his comrade the one on the left.

The sharp, piercing crack of two rifles was heard, and the fated red men lay lifeless on the ground.

Before the smoke had cleared away, the reserve one (McClelland) was far in the direction of the Indian who was doomed to be captured. The Indian observed him as he came bounding toward him with the swiftness of a roebuck, and he set off at the top of

COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

Monetary and Commercial.

Our Monetary market is fairly active, without closeness; the Discount-houses extending accommodations to all their good customers at 10@12 per cent., but doing very little in outside paper, even when of undoubted character. However, the demand for Money in the street is limited, and few transactions of consequence occur there.

The general trade of the city is good, and the business streets bear an animated appearance. This week will probably be a brisk one in dry goods.

Saturday's Press and Tribune thus speaks of financial affairs in Chicago on Friday:
Exchange is firm at 2%, and of course no one can tell exactly how long it will continue at present figures. The strong south wind resterings and to-day must weaken the ice at the Straits, and tend to always to the strait of the strait of the strait of the early opening. The next news from that quarrer will be looked for with interest. Gold is 2% with no demand. The general money market is close. "Street transactions" seem destined from present appearances, to an 'eternal sleep."

Lixous Banks.—To-morrow (31) is the last day of grace for these Illinois banks whose escurities were Missouri stocks, to deposit additional bonds, to make the par value of their securities ten per cent. above their issues, as required by law. We learn that all of them have complied with the call. That was rendered the more easy, as Missouri stocks have rison very considerably since the call was made.

The domainds for birge amounts of Morroy, for building and other purposes; for which abundant and and oubted security could be given, seems not to be large this season. For permanent or long-time investment, with such security, we learn that Money could now be had at comparatively low rates, 10, or possibly even a per cent. And we are aware of no good reason why, with perfect securities. Money should not seek investment here at a per cent, it is as much as our best institutions charge, even on short time.

BOSTON BOOT AND SHOE MARRET.—The Shoe and Leather Reporter has the following in regard to the Boston Boot and Shoe Market of last week:

of last week:

The market continues quiet. The houses engaged in the Southern and Western wholesele trade are filling an occasional order; with the poblers who sell to the interior, business continues fair. Furchases for the New England trade are beginning to be made, but not as yet to a large extent. The stock of goods on the market is small, but as the demand is very light, manufacturers are not diagnosed to increase the quantity.

Prices are firm, and the recent advances on desirable goods may be set down as from five to ten percent. In the manufacturing fowns, we find that strikers stock is rather a depressed condition, and shares are getting below par. It is doubtless near time for the bubble to buret. Among the clearances for the week, we notice ship Hameluke, for San Francisco, 1,060 cases.
